July 27, 2016 A whole-foods diet may lower the risk of developing kidney disease, and it certainly plays a role in the recovery process, according to new research in the American Journal of Kidney Diseases. In an observational

study of more than 1,500 adults, researchers found that a diet high in vegetable protein was associated with a lower risk of developing end-stage kidney disease. The investigators, led by Eleni Demitriadou, Ph.D., from the University of Pisa, in Italy, noted that end-stage kidney disease is a major public health problem that affects 20 to 25 percent of people with chronic kidney disease. According to the researchers, the results of 77a5ca646e

The placenta is an organ where maternal and fetal vascular beds are highly interdependent. The maternal vasculature is responsible for supplying oxygen and nutrients to the placenta and it is also responsible for removing excessive products from the fetus. Some of the molecules involved in the placenta-maternal circulation cross-talk (chemokines, hormones and inflammatory cytokines) are regulated by heme oxygenase-1 (HO-1), an enzyme that catalyzes the degradation of heme to biliverdin, free iron and carbon monoxide.
